DOUBTS AS TO MISS KEISER'S DEATH.

WHAT MR. AND MRS. DUNN SAY—THE COURSE OF THE BULLET—NO AUTOPSY MADE.

The body of Rose E. Keiser, who was found lying in the room of George W. Dunn, in the Windsor Hotel on Thursday night, with a pistol wound in her head, remained in the undertaking shop at No. 163 Bowery, until 10 o'clock yesterday morning. Early in the day Paul Keiser, the eldest brother of the dead woman, called at the shop and asked that the body should be sent to the Grand Central Depot in time for the 10:30 a. m. train for Utica. At that hour Mr. Keiser received his sister's body at the depot and started with it for her birth-place, where it will be buried.

MRS. DUNN'S ACCOUNT OF THE SHOOTING.

When a TRIBUNE reporter called at the Windsor Hotel last evening he was told that the room 314, however, he found Mrs. Dunn alone. She is a handsome woman of about thirty, with rich color and dark brown hair brought low down on her forehead. She was dressed in a black and white gown, with a white collar and cuffs. She said, "I have persuaded Mr. Dunn," she said, "to see you, for I feel that by his silence he is doing himself an injustice. His own sense of what is honorable has led him to refuse to say a single word which should add a pang to the already keen sufferings of the dead woman's mother. I myself have seen the woman's letters to my husband and was told the whole story by him before my marriage, and I am convinced that he has acted in a thoroughly honorable, upright and just manner. He tried to break off the connection in a graceful way, but the woman was determined to make trouble for him. Some months ago, when he first told her that he must break with her, she was living in a most improper life somewhere in the Fifth-street, but as soon as she found that he was going to leave her, she moved and assumed an air of respectability. This was, I am convinced, a mere scheme on her part to enable her to persecute him the more. About two or three weeks ago she came to see me and told me a lot of falsehoods about my husband. I had just heard a sermon on Charity at Grace Church and felt that I had now an opportunity to show it. I therefore told her that she was young and had a life before her in which to retrieve herself, and that in me she would always have a friend. She refused my proffered friendship and went out with threats on her lips. She was an utterly bad woman. She was driven from home by her family after she had threatened her own brother with a pistol. He utterly disowned her and I believe still does so. William Dunn persuaded his mother to do so. To interest in her and save her some mill work to do. For the last four months she has persecuted him daily by sending notes, calling, wailing him in the street, and doing everything in her power to annoy him.

"On Thursday I was sitting here with my husband when she burst into the room. My husband rose from his seat and ordered her out, but I asked him to let me speak kindly to her. After a long tirade of abuse she said she would ruin him and me. When he asked her how, she said: 'Look in to-morrow's papers and you will see. You have injured me and I will have revenge.' I said that I was sure Mr. Dunn had not injured her, to which she replied, 'You lie! you lie! you lie!' By this time she was at the door, and putting her hand down began, as I thought, to fumble with the lock. I heard a sharp click and in an instant her right hand was raised to her temple and she fell in a heap. The door was opened, and some one outside, and I said to my husband, 'She has shot herself.' He was sitting by the window and ran forward, reaching the body just as the hotel officers entered."

At this moment the mother of Mr. Dunn entered the room. She is a pleasant looking old lady and speaks with a pronounced German accent. After going over much of the ground her daughter-in-law had already covered the old lady said: "The girl forced her way to my room about two weeks ago and acted like a crazy person. She said she had come to say good-bye to my son, and flourishing a pistol, said that was what she was going to say good-bye with. I reminded her of the future life and she said that she lived in—here and might as well live in—afterwards. She followed us to Saratoga last summer and threatened to kill my daughter-in-law, who was then Mrs. Alexander."

DUNN'S OWN STORY.

A few minutes later Mr. Dunn entered the room, visibly excited. He is a tall, muscular man with a close-cropped head, dark hair, dark eyes, and strongly marked features.

"I have been very angry during the past two days," said he, "and don't want to say a word about it. I do not wish to blacken a dead woman's character. As to what has been said about me in the papers, I do not care. My friends know me and I care not a jot for other people's opinions. This girl has bothered and annoyed me for four months, and the whole affair is an infernal outrage. She was crazy on the subject of suicide and was always threatening it. As to my ever having taken money from her, that is absurd. She was always talking to me about her lovers and the attentions she received from them, and perhaps because I did not flatter her she fell crazily in love with me. I did all an honorable man could to help her to live a proper life, but it is impossible to reason with a crazy woman. When she forced her way in on Thursday I was so angry that I told her to leave the room instantly and wanted to take her by the arm and put her out of the hotel publicly. My wife restrained me and I sat down by the window and kept quiet. Eventually, after a long string of lies she walked toward me from the corner of the alcove hid her hand and in a moment I heard the sound of the shot and my wife exclaimed: 'She has shot herself!' I ran forward to the body and at that instant the hotel officer entered the room. I tell you the woman was a raving maniac on that point, and her family will bear my statements out. She had got hold of a detective, I believe, and stuffed him full of lies about me. She never paid my bill at Saratoga, as has been stated, and my mother has never visited her except to see her about a bonnet she was making."

MORE ABOUT DUNN'S CAREER.

Mr. Dunn added that he had nothing to say in refutation of the stories printed about his past life and had always behaved himself as an honorable man. It was learned, however, that Dunn was born in Philadelphia, and was graduated from the High School of that city. He was employed as a shipping clerk by Messrs. Falk & Co., of Philadelphia, and about six or seven years ago came to New-York, bringing with him a notorious woman of that city. He took a room in Wall-st. near the Hotel, and had it fitted up as a private gambling room. At this time he was visited by James O'Brien, an ex-Police Commissioner, who was then in New-York. It was then that Dunn was most invariably, except when Mr. Walton introduced James Kelly and "Phil" Daly and other professional gamblers. Mr. Dunn was then $8,000 in debt, and was dabbled much in stocks. Dunn was proposed for membership in the Blossom Club in 1879 by F. Theodore Walton. President Edward Kearney said last night that he was a quiet man. About three years ago he got into trouble with a woman in Philadelphia, but the nature of the trouble Mr. Kearney did not know. Dunn had not visited the club within a year. He was a member of the New York Athletic Club, and passed much time in boating on the Harlem River. Miss Keiser lived in Washington-st., Saratoga, during the month that Dunn passed there, and was evidently respected by the persons with whom she lived. Dunn had never spoken of her to him (Mr. Kearney).

Dunn has desk-room in the office of the Old Brooklyn Copper Mining Company, at No. 72 Broadway.

WHAT DETECTIVE SCHOFIELD SAW AND HEARD.

Detective Schofield, of the Windsor Hotel, repeated his story of the shooting and said that the pistol was not under the body, but near it.

"Did you hear any other voice raised just before the shot?" he was asked.

"No."

"Where was Dunn when you entered the room?"

"Coming forward, round the corner of the alcove."

"Why did you not inform the police sooner?"

"Because I went straight down to the Coroner's office. They telephoned to all the corners, but I did not find out until I left. When I got to the hotel a little after 6, Coroner Martin was there."

"How long did it take you to enter the room after hearing the shot?"

"I was much startled and could not say positively, but it was very soon."

"Was there time for any one in the room to have stepped back from the door?"

"No, I think not. No footstep, though, but then I probably would not have heard them in any case, as the carpet is soft and the door thick."

It was stated in the hotel that Dunn sent up to the Coroner's Office a letter from the dead woman, written by her, and addressed to the Coroner, Mr. Coroner Martin said the letter would be held on Tuesday. It was not strange that no autopsy was made. It was not necessary in cases of suicide, the wound was a trifle back of the right temple and the bullet took a course directly across the head.

"Is not this course extraordinary if the wound was self-inflicted?" asked the reporter.

"No, not especially so."

"Did you ever know a similar case?"

"Mr. Martin thought a moment and then replied: 'Deputy Coroner Jenkins said that it was not the custom to hold autopsies in cases of suicide. But,' he added, 'I know a doubt existed that it was a suicide. I have known the head of a man who had been already dressed for burial. There was a fracture caused by the bullet on the left side of the head, in a direct line with the wound of the wound. The flesh about the right temple was discolored. I did not notice whether the skin was scored.'

The wound was a 22-caliber, and numbered 3207. At the Coroner's office it was said that it was of the old style, and that the combustion of the powder would not be perfect.

The undertaker's assistant, who dressed the body, said that the right side of the face was blacked with powder. When he washed the face he did not notice that the flesh had been scorched, or that any unburned powder had embedded itself in the flesh.

STATEMENT OF DR. RANNEY.

Dr. James W. Ranney, of 17 East Forty-sixth-st., is the family physician of Dunn and his mother. Directly after the shooting Detective Schofield summoned Dr. Ranney to the hotel. The doctor said last night that he found Miss Keiser lying upon the floor. The housekeeper, a chambermaid and Mrs. Dunn were standing by the body. Dunn himself sat on a sofa near by. "His face was pale and he seemed like a man bereft of reason," said Dr. Ranney. "Schofield asked him questions about the affair while I attended to the dying woman. He gave his answers in a cool and collected voice. I was so much taken up with the woman that I did not remember what he said. Miss Keiser was still alive when I put my ear to her heart, but in about a minute it ceased to beat. The wound was in the upper part of the temple. The hole was large and the bullet had passed through the brain. I might have been a suicide or it might not, for all I could tell. In the evening I met Mr. Dunn at his home, at 17 East Forty-sixth-st. He told me the history of the woman and said she had been the mistress of another man in Utica before he knew her. She was crazy in her mind for him. I said to Dunn: 'You had better give a statement of this matter to the police, as the fact that there were only three of you in the room at the time will give rise to suspicious in the public mind.' He said: 'I told the letter she left sufficient to clear me.' I told him I thought not. He immediately went to the police station in Fifty-first-st. This was shortly before midnight."
